William Fitch (1734-1785)

Born: July 18, 1737 in Lebanon (New London Co.), CT

Parents: James Fitch (1709-1760) and Abiel Metcalf (1709-1778)

NOTES

James Fitch (1709) was a descendant of another James Fitch (1623-1702), the founder of Lebanon, Connecticut in 1666. The name of the town was in honor of the Bible land, for it was high on a hill and surrounded by a large cedar forest. The first James (1623) was the father of Nathaniel Fitch (1679), Nathaniel was the father of James (1709), and James the father of William (1734).

About William Fitch

As a young man he made his way from western Connecticut to eastern New York. He married in Columbia County, New York. The first five of his children were born there. Before the birth of Alta (1770) they moved to Pawlet, Vermont, where William was an early, and important, settler, and where the three youngest girls were born. He owned the first sawmill and grist mill built in Pawlet, and kept the first store in town. The village was known in early days as Fitch's Mills.

He was engaged by the Council of Safety to furnish supplies to the troops raised to repel the invasion of Burgoyne in 1777. When the settlers north of town fled, fearing the arrival of British troops, his wife Alta, with three small daughters (Alta, 7; Sybil, 5; and Anna, 4) all mounted on one horse, started south seeking refuge.

He served during the Revolution as a private at the alarms at Skeesborough and at Ticonderoga, in Captain Stark's Company, Ira Allen's Regiment. In 1775 he was commissioned a Captain. In the family Bible is this inscription: "This William Fitch it is said was in the Revolution and was in the Battle of Bennington under General Stark – was one of the Green Mountain Boys."

His only son died at age thirty-four. Four of his daughters (Abiel, Margaret, Sina, and Anna) married men who took them away to western New York. Daughters Rachel and Sybil remained in Pawlet, where they raised their families.

NOTES

James Fitch (1709) was a descendant of Governor William Bradford of Plymouth Colony.

Heyltje ("Alta") Wheeler (1732) was the daughter of Samuel and Margareta VanWoert Wheeler of Kinderhook, New York. She married again after William's death. On February 18, 1788, she married Elisha Clark; Elisha died six months later on August 20. His first wife was Irena Meiggs; they were the parents of Ozias (1764-1855) Daniel (1768), Joseph, and Asahel. Ozias and Daniel married the Fitch sisters, Rachel and Sybil. Alta went to Richmond in 1795 with her daughters' families. She lived first with her daughter Abiel Harmon then with daughter Margaret Reed. When she died on May 26, 1805, she was the first person to be buried in the Richmond Center Cemetery.

John Fitch (1765) and his sister Alta (1770) both died while the family was living in Vermont.

Rachel Fitch (1768) was born September 9 in Pawlet, Vermont. She married there and did not leave. She had nine children: Nancy, Meiggs, Irena, Fitch, Alta, John, Robert, Betsey, and Mariette.

Sybil Fitch (1772) was born February 24 in Pawlet; she also remained in Pawlet. Her children were Elisha, William, Philip, Wheeler, John Cyrus, Darius, Corilla, Cornelia, Sina, and Daniel.

NOTES

Nathaniel Harmon (1713) was born in Connecticut, the son of Nathaniel Harmon (1686-1763) and Esther Austin (1687-1761). He wrote poetry, some of which was published in his lifetime. He was known in his family as “Nathaniel the Poet.” A pacifist and “deeply religious man,” his conscience did not allow him to serve in the militia during the Revolution. He did, however, serve after the Battle of Bennington by burying the dead. The first eight of his children were born in Suffield, Connecticut, the three youngest, in New Marlborough, Massachusetts.

Elizabeth Bridgman (1714) was the daughter of James Bridgman (1678-1728) and Elizabeth Allis (1679-1712).

Aran Harmon (1738) had a daughter and a son: Sarah and Rawson.

Caleb Harmon (1740) was the father of five children: Hannah, Rachel, Sybil, Elizabeth, and Israel.

Joshua Harmon (1744) lived in Saratoga County, New York. His wife Sarah had four children: Lucy, Sylvester, Betsy, and Samuel. His wife Mary had Elijah, Alva, Nervia, Levi, Catherine, and Polly.

Elizabeth Harmon (1747) had a son, Benjamin.

Elijah Harmon (1751) had a large family: Enos, Irene, Electa, Levi, Elijah, Gaius, and Rebecca.

Gaius Harmon (1754) lived in Onondaga County, New York. His children were Tryphena, Polly, Silas, Sabra, Enos, Moses, Medad, Betsey, and Reuben.

About Nathaniel Harmon

Born and raised in Massachusetts, by the end of the Revolution Nathaniel had located to Pawlet, Vermont, where he married in his early twenties. In the winter of 1795 (when he was thirty-eight years old) he brought his wife and six surviving children to Richmond, in the company of his three brothers-in-law, Lemuel and Cyrus Chipman and Philip Reed. His youngest five children were born in Richmond. Nathaniel was a highly devout man, one of the first two deacons of the Richmond Congregational Church, which was organized in 1805.

“Captain Harmon built a barn in 1802 or ’03; at the raising an adopted son of his, by the name of Butts, was killed outright and Isaac Bishop was stunned, supposed to be dead. He recovered, but with the entire loss of the faculty of memory.” (Pioneer History of the Holland Purchase of Western New York, Orsamus Turner.)

NOTES

Abiel Fitch (1762) was born March 6, in Greenbush, New York, the daughter of William Fitch and Alta Wheeler. Three of her sisters, Anna Chipman, Sina Chipman, and Margaret Reed, were other early settlers of Richmond.

Alta Harmon (1782) had four children: Fitch, Meigs, Stephen, and Harmon. She died March 9, 1840 in Livonia, New York.

Tina Harmon (1784) and Jacob Wimple (1782-1851) lived in Richmond and were the parents of eight children: Walter (1810), Philia (1813), John (1814), Louise (1816), Augustus (1819), Edmond (1821), Abiel (1822, a daughter), and Emily (1825). Three of his daughters married men from Richmond: Emily (1825-1863) married Cyrus Dixon, son of John Dixon and Mehitabel Wells; they had no children. Philia (1813-1890) married Wheeler Reed II (1811-1894) and Louise married Wheeler's brother Philip (1813-1897). The Reed brothers were sons of John Fitch Reed and Antha Steele.

Philia Harmon (1785) had three children: Caroline, Hugh, and Worlin. She died in Livonia.

John Gregg (1784) was the son of Hugh Gregg and Rachel Taggart. His brother Jacob (1793) married his wife's sister, Betsey.

Nancy Harmon (1791) and sisters Betsey (1794) and Sybil (1801) died in Tecumseh (Lenawee County), Michigan.

Betsey Harmon (1794) had five children: James, Manders, Esther, Jacob, and Elizabeth. Her husband Jacob was the brother of John, who was married to Betsey's sister Philia.

Sarah ("Sally") Harmon (1799) married and moved to Franklin (Lenawee County), Michigan, in 1830. Her obituary appeared in a local newspaper in 1871:

On the 8th inst. in Franklin, Lenawee Co., Mich., Mrs. Sally Wells, wife of the late Dea. James B. Wells, and mother-in-law of Prof. Estabrook, aged 72 years. Mrs. Wells has left a wide circle of friends and relatives to mourn her departure. Her house for many years was the welcome and hospitable home of many guests, who always cherished pleasant memories of their visits there. She was the mother of thirteen children, nine of whom still survive, and all but two were present with her in her last hours on earth.

For more than fifty years she had been a consistent member of the Church of Christ. Her life was beautiful. Always calm in the midst of the severest trials and afflictions (of which she experienced not a few), she manifested the deep resignation that told, plainer than words, of a heart subdued by the grace of God, and in sweet submission to His dealings. Her last hours on earth were hours of triumph. The parting scene was touching and glorious. She gave her parting blessing to her children and grand children, and left messages of love for those who were absent. She said that those who were waiting for her on the other side were more than those she left behind. Death had for her no terrors. Her last words were, "I am happy," and she passed into a higher life. She has left a pleasant home on earth, and one she loved for a mansion in the skies.

James Bridgman Wells (1798-1864) was the son of Cyrus Wells (1768-1838) and Rhoda Pettibone (1770-1840).

About Philip Reed

“When a boy [in Connecticut] he was bound out to learn the weaver’s trade. At the age of sixteen he went to Vermont, where he was employed by one William Fitch to teach his girls the art of weaving. He seems to have combined pleasure with business, as he courted and married the second daughter [Margaret].” (Portraits and Biographies of the Governors of Michigan, Chicago; 1889) Margaret’s sisters, Anna and Sina, married the Chipman brothers, Cyrus and Lemuel; her sister Abiel married Nathaniel Harmon.

During the Revolution Philip was twenty-two when he served in the Vermont militia at the Battle of Bennington (August 1777), under the command of General Stark. Three years later he married, and in the passage of time three sons were born.

In 1794 Philip was thirty-eight. In June of that year he came with his brothers-in-law Lemuel and Cyrus Chipman to Richmond on a prospecting tour. In the course of that visit, it is said, he climbed a tree on a hilltop (later the settlement at Allen’s Hill) to look over the territory where he thought of settling. Apparently he liked what he saw, picking out a particularly tall tree to mark the area he preferred. This became the settlement at Richmond Mills.

The following February (1795) Philip returned with his wife and three boys, his hired man Isaac Adams, and a twenty-year-old black servant woman, Jane Lebanon. Also in the company were both his Chipman brothers-in-law and their families, and his brother-in-law Nathaniel Harmon, his wife and six children. They made the trip on sleds drawn by sturdy oxen, and driven by Levi Blackmer, Pierce Chamberlain, Asa Denison, and Isaac Adams. “Sleighing was good and the trip was made in eighteen days.” (History of Ontario County; Lewis Cass Aldrich; George S. Conover, Ed.; 1893). “As soon as they could procure lumber, they built a shanty, in which they lived three weeks, performing their culinary work by the side of a log in the meantime, then moved into the new log house. In that primitive day Philip Reed was considered [to be very rich. He had with him $3,000.] He purchased two lots of land, paying fifteen shillings ($1.88) per acre, and continued to add to his real estate until he owned 1,500 acres.” (Governors of Michigan)

They settled on the banks of the Hemlock Outlet -- in the area that came to be called Richmond Mills (also known as Frost Hollow). He built one of the first sawmills in the area in 1803. A year later, bringing the mill stones by ox team from New Hampshire, he built the first grist mill on the outlet. Hugh Gregg was the miller. The Reeds’ black servant woman, Jane, lived with the family all her life; when she died in 1844 she was buried in the Richmond Center Cemetery, near the Reed Family plot.

Philip and his brother-in-law Cyrus Chipman both began to build their brick homes in 1802 – the first such houses in the township. Cyrus’ house was three-and-a-half miles east of Philip’s property, but the building of the identical houses went along simultaneously. Bricks were made by Asa Gorkins on the Chipman site, the timbers were cut from the Reed woodlands. Nails were hand-forged by the local blacksmith.

“The compensation for the construction and painting was to be $400, of which $50 [one-eighth] was to be paid in cash and the balance in ‘good cattle, wheat and pork,’ and a provision in the contract was that Reed should ‘board the contractor, Lewis Morey, and all the men he should employ, and to give each man during the time he should be employed two gills [8 oz.] of whisky per day.’” (History of Ontario County)

Alva Reed, a great-grandson of Philip, wrote a short memoir in 1925 called “Out of the Past.” He notes: “I have before me Philip Reed’s account book, dated at Pittstown, 1805...I see that his men [who built the house] were paid largely in wheat, tallow, cider, apples, hay, corn, bran, cheese, honey, butter, wine, beef, and whiskey, which last named item was 25 cents a quart.” Two years after they were begun, both homes were finished in 1804, and both stand today.

At the first town meeting in April 1796, Philip Reed was elected Assessor and Commissioner of Schools. He also served as one of the Overseers of the Poor. In subsequent years he was Town Supervisor (1801-1804). In 1802 his real estate property was valued at $3,605, for which he paid a tax of $10.73.

Of Philip’s last years, Alva wrote: “In his later years he was not able to get about much, having suffered some from paralysis, and used to sit by the north window in his house.”

About Lemuel Chipman

Lemuel was a medical doctor in Connecticut and later in Vermont. During the Revolution he served in the Continental Army as assistant surgeon to Dr. Dickinson during the Battle of Bennington. After the war he settled in Pawlet, Vermont, (where his younger brother Cyrus later joined him), and practiced medicine there. Dr. Lemuel Chipman was the first president of the Vermont Medical Society. He was a member of the Vermont State Legislature for eight years (1788-1793) and served as an Assistant Judge of the Rutland County Court. In 1793 he was a member of the Constitutional Convention.

He and his wife Sina (the sister of Anna Fitch, who married Lemuel's younger brother Cyrus) lived in Pawlet, where five of their children were born (and two of them died), until 1795 when they came to Ontario County, New York, settling in what was then known as Pittstown (later Richmond). He was forty-two years old and the father of four living children. Several members of his extended family also came to Richmond at that time.

In New York he served as a member of the U.S. House of Representatives, and later as Senator; he was a Judge of the Ontario County Court and a Presidential Elector. For four years (between 1803 and 1808) he was an Ontario County Justice of the Peace. Lemuel Chipman was elected the first supervisor of Richmond, serving from 1796 to 1800, then again in 1806, 1814, and 1821.

In 1803 he bought land in Wyoming County, New York in partnership with Roswell Turner and Oliver Phelps. It wasn't until 1828, however, that he moved to that county, where he was one of the principal settlers of the township of Sheldon. A Wyoming County publication gives details of his life after he left Richmond:

In Vermont Lemuel [Chipman] and his brothers, Nathaniel and Daniel, began notable careers. The brothers became prominent jurists, the Hon. Nathaniel living at Middlebury. Lemuel studied the profession of physic and surgery and settled in Pawlet, Vermont, where he practiced with great success and reputation, we are told, until he removed to Ontario County, New York in 1795. In the spring of 1828 he removed from Richmond, where he had resided 33 years, to Sheldon, Wyoming County. Here, within the circle of his family, advanced in years and subject to the infirmities of age, he rounded out his days as one of the community's most honored men. He took up residence with his son Fitch, who died at Sheldon Center in 1829, then with Lemuel, Jr., a War of 1812 veteran, who lived east of Frink's Corners on the road to North Java station. The Judge was a devoted member of the Episcopal church, and when he died, April 28, 1831, age 76, the Batavia "Spirit of the Times" said of him that "his kindness, suavity and liberality, had endeared him to all who knew him, and his house and table were better specimens of old-fashioned and unaffected hospitality than almost any found in this part of the State." ("Historical Wyoming" a newsletter of the Wyoming County Historical Society, July 1954: "Among Sheldon Pioneers" by Harry S. Douglass)

NOTES

Sina Fitch (1767) was born February 13, at Kinderhook (Columbia County), New York; she was the sister of Anna Fitch Chipman (wife of Cyrus), Abiel Fitch Harmon (wife of Nathaniel), and Margaret Fitch Reed (wife of Philip). “The wife of [Lemuel Chipman] was an accomplished woman.” (From an unpublished history of the Cheney family.)

Lemuel Chipman, Jr. (1782) was a militia volunteer in the war of 1812, and was taken prisoner by the British. He died April 28, 1844 in Sheldon, New York, and is buried in Frink’s Corners Cemetery.

Fitch Chipman’s (1785) children were Maria, 1812; Lemuel, 1813; Samuel, 1814; Sarah, 1816; Susan, 1819; Adelaide, 1822; Benjamin, 1827; and Frances, 1830; he died in Michigan

Samuel Chipman (1788) was a noted temperance man. He was editor of The Star of Temperance, a newspaper published in Rochester in 1828-34. In order to get the statistics regarding drink and how it related to crime, he visited the prisons and poor houses of New York, Ohio, and four other northeastern states.

Asenath Chipman (1796) was born September first in Richmond; she died March 16, 1882 in Howell, Michigan.

About Cyrus Chipman

Cyrus grew up in Connecticut, serving in the state militia during the Revolution. He was a physician. After the war, about 1786, he relocated to Pawlet, Vermont, where his brother Lemuel (also a doctor) lived and practiced. A year later he married the sister of his brother's wife. In 1794, at age thirty-three, he came to Richmond with his wife and three young daughters: Alta, Hannah, and Sophia. Much of his extended family also came, including his brother Lemuel and two brothers-in-law, Nathaniel Harmon and Philip Reed. He and his wife had ten more children while living in Richmond.

A well-respected doctor, Cyrus served for some years as president of the medical society of Ontario County. In 1802-04 he built a large brick house on his farm (on the east side of present-day Abbey Road, just south of the Simmons Road intersection) at the same time that his brother-in-law Philip Reed built his home at Richmond Mills.

Cyrus and his family moved to Oakland County Michigan in 1821, where, as one of the earliest settlers of Pontiac, he continued to practice medicine.

NOTES

Alta Chipman (1791) married her cousin, Silas Reed; he was the son of Phillip Reed (1783-1853) and Margaret Fitch (who was the older sister of Alta's mother Anna).

Hannah Chipman, (1792) according to her 1868 obituary, "was a woman of deep piety from early life and active member of the Presbyterian church of Dansville for over forty years. She had twelve children...three died in infancy...Mrs. Cook was always much interested in the different branches of the church work. A few days after her husband's death [in April], she went with her son L. C. Cook to his home in Fedrow, Fulton County, Ohio, and died suddenly of heart disease, October 30th, 1868 aged 76 years."

Lyman N. Cook (1790) was a medical doctor. He lived for several years with the Chipman family, studying under Cyrus' tutelage. He received his medical diploma on January 13, 1810 at the age of nineteen. Afterward he practiced in Livonia and Richmond for eleven years. On July 22, 1812, he married Cyrus' daughter Hannah. In 1818 they moved to Dansville, then in 1824 to Johnstown, Ohio. He later returned to Dansville, where he practiced medicine until his death in 1868.

Sophia Chipman (1794) and her sister Nancy (1797) married the Hurlburt brothers, Jacques and Cyrus; both these families later moved to Sandusky, Ohio.

Cyrus Chipman (1801) and siblings Samuel (1803), John (1807), George (1811), Daniel (1813), and Anna (1817) lived in Michigan, where they died. Cyrus' children were George, Martha, Cyrus, Henry, Jacques, Alethia, James, and Frances.

Samuel Chipman (1803) had several children: Fitch, Cyrus D., Cyrus A., Guy, Jay, Samuel, Melissa, Olivia, Charles, Franklin, Arabella, and Cyrus N. (It is supposed that Cyrus D. and Cyrus A. both died young.)

John Chipman's (1805) children were Charles, Ellen, and Marshall.

William Chipman's (1809) children were Theudius, Albion, Leroy, and Amelia.

George Chipman (1811) had one daughter, Sarah.
